COMMENTARIES

Anderson, Robert A. Signs and Wonders: A Commentary on the Book of Daniel. International Theological Commentary. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans; Edinburgh: Handsell, 1984. [Rev. in JETS, March 1985].

Archer, Gleason L., Jr. "Daniel." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary, 7:3-157. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan Pub. House, Regency Reference Library, 1985.

This is an outstanding commentary by a recognized evangelical scholar from a premillennial viewpoint. This commentary along with Miller's represent two of the best available in English. Archer does provide some technical detail and Hebrew-Aramaic notes lacking in many popular-level works. Highly recommended.

Archer, Gleason L., Jr. Jerome's Commentary on Daniel. Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, 1958.

A translation and guide to Jerome's commentary. Cf. Braverman below.

Baldwin, Joyce G. Daniel; An Introduction and Commentary. Tyndale Old Testament Commentaries. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1978.

This is a helpful readable commentary from a British conservative scholar. She handles well the introductory problems and includes excursions on the prayer of Nabonidus, the "son of man," and Daniel's seventy weeks.

Braverman, Jay. Jerome's Commentary on Daniel: A Study of Comparative Jewish and Christian Interpretations of the Hebrew Bible. In The Catholic Biblical Quarterly Monograph Series No. 7. Washington, D.C.: Catholic Biblical Assoc. of America, 1978.

Buchanan, George Wesley. The Book of Daniel. The Mellen Biblical Commentary, Old Testament Series, vol. 25. Lewiston, New York: The Edwin Mellen Press, 1999.

Calvin, John. Daniel. Geneva Series of Commentaries. Banner of Truth.

This Banner of Truth edition (printed in one volume) has been reprinted from the Calvin Translation Society two volume edition of 1852-53, edited by Thomas Myers.

Charles, Robert H. A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Book of Daniel. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1929.

Collins, John J. Daniel. Hermenia. Minneapolis, MN: Fortress Press, 1993.

Culver, Robert D. "Daniel." In The Wycliffe Bible Commentary, edited by C. F. Pfeiffer and E. F. Harrison. Chicago: Moody Press, 1962.

DeHaan, Martin R. Daniel the Prophet. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan Pub. House, 1947.

Driver, Samuel R. The Book of Daniel. The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges. 5th ed. London: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1922.

Critical approach, although there is some linguistic and historical help on the text.

Feinberg, Charles Lee. Daniel; The Man and His Visions. Chappaqua, New York: Christian Herald Books, 1981.

Dr. Feinberg is a Hebrew-Christian who came to faith in Christ many years ago as a Rabbinical student. He has taught on the faculty of Talbot Seminary for many years. This is a brief nontechnical exposition of the book from a dispensational premillennial viewpoint. Helpful. He understands the "King" of Dan 11:36 to be not the Beast of Rev 13, but the False Prophet (whom he regards as the Antichrist). He also holds this "Antichrist" to be Jewish.

Ferguson, Sinclair B. Daniel. The Preacher's Commentary, vol. 21. Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson,

Written from a Reformed and amillennial perspective.

Gaebelein, A. C. The Prophet Daniel. 14th ed. New York: "Our Hope" Pub., 1911.

A premillennial treatment from one of the "old school" dispensationalists. Helpful for a historical perspective on dispensational interpretation.

Goldingay, John. Daniel. Word Biblical Commentary, vol. 30. Waco, TX: Word, 1989.

This is a very up-to-date commentary, but disappointingly not as conservative as I would like to see (this series could be considered quasi-conservative; several volumes buy into critical positions). The format of the book, however, is excellent. Many helpful technical notes, but weak in interpretation. Assumes that the "seventy weeks" prophecy in Dan 9:24-27 finds fulfillment in the Maccabbean period with Antiochus Epiphanes (the standard critical view).

Goldwurm, Rabbi Hersch. Daniel; A New Translation with a Commentary Anthologized from Talmudic, Midrashic and Rabbinic Sources. 2nd ed. Brooklyn, NY: Mesorah Publications, Ltd., 1980.

This is a Jewish commentary containing a wealth of information on Rabbinic comments on Daniel as well as lexical help.

Gowan, Donald E. Daniel. Abingdon Old Testament Commentaries. Nashville: Abingdon, 2001.

OT Abstracts: "The Introduction covers the usual problems: setting of the book, date (final form 165 B.C.), authorship and question of pseudonymity, languages and text, place in canon, genres in chaps. 1–6 and 7–12, use of earlier traditions, style, structure, Daniel as a work of theology. The commentary of each section follows the same pattern: literary analysis, exegetical analysis, and theological and ethical analysis."

Hartman, Louis F., and Alexander A. DiLella. The Book of Daniel. The Anchor Bible. Garden City, NY: Doubleday & Co., Inc., 1978.

Although most of the conclusions will not be acceptable to conservatives, this is probably one of the best treatments from a critical perspective. There is a denial of the historicity of Daniel, yet there is much help in the lexical notes. Well researched, although weak in interpretation.

Hippolytus. Commentary on Daniel. Translated by Maurice Lefèvre. SC 14. Paris: Cerf, 1947.

Hitzig, F. Das Buch Daniel. Leipzig: Weidmann, 1850.

Ironside, H. A. Lectures on Daniel the Prophet. New York: Loizeaux Bros., 1920.

Ironside was famous as a solid expositor of Scripture (from the older premillennial, dispensational camp).

Jeffrey, A. "The Exegesis of the Book of Daniel." In The Interpreter's Bible, ed. G. Buttrick, vol. VI, 341-59. Nashville, TN: Abingdon, 1956.

Jerusalmi, Rabbi Isaac. The Aramaic Sections of Ezra and Daniel; A Philological Commentary. 2nd rev.

ed. Cincinnati, Ohio: Hebrew Union College - Jewish Institute of Religion, 1978.

An indispensable aid for work with the Aramaic text of Daniel.

Keil, C. F. "Biblical Commentary on the Book of Daniel." In vol 9: Ezekiel, Daniel. Translated by M.G. Easton. Commentary on the Old Testament. 10 vols. N.p., 1884; reprint ed., Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans Pub. Co., 1975.

This is a very full interaction with the text from a conservative viewpoint. Quite technical, but weak in interpretation as a result of an amillennial approach. Obviously not up to date with current scholarship and archaeological matters.

Kelly, William. Notes on the Book of Daniel. 7th ed. New York: Loizeaux Bros., 1943.

A learned writer in England from the Plymouth Brethren movement.

Kennedy, Gerald. Daniel. The Interpreter's Bible, edited by George A. Buttrick. Vol. VI. New York: Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1956.

Kliefoth, T. Das Buch Daniel übersetzt und erklärt. Schwerin: Sandmeyer, 1868.

Lacocque, André. The Book of Daniel. Trans. David Pellauer. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1979.

Chapters 1–6 (Daniel A) are midrashim; 8–12 are apocalypses; 7 is both. [Daniel B = 7–12].

Lucas, Ernest C. Daniel. Apollos Old Testament Commentary 20. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 2002.

“Dealing mainly with the text in its present form, L. is sceptical about the possibility of recovering earlier forms of the Daniel tradition. A Brief introduction summarizes matters of textual transmission, the translation philosophy underlying L.’s rendering of the Hebrew/Aramaic text, genre considerations, hermeneutical issues, and the historical context. A chart calls attention to dates of various kinds and events that are relevant to understanding Daniel. Each unit of the commentary proper is divided into four sections: (1) ‘Notes’ treats issues of textual criticism, grammar, and semantics; (2) ‘Form and structure’ highlights concerns of genre, organization, unity, and word usage; (3) ‘Comment’ provides detailed examination of historical, cultural, and religious questions; while (4) ‘Explanation’ stresses theological topics, with some consideration of the contemporary implications of the Book of Daniel. Issues of date and authorship are tackled in an ‘Epilogue.’” [OT Absr 27:2, June 2004].

Lucas, Ernest C. "Daniel." In Isaiah, Jeremiah, Lamentations, Ezekiel, Daniel, ed. John H. Walton, 518-75. Zondervan Illustrated Bible Backgrounds Commentary, Vol. 4. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 2009.

Leupold, H.C. Exposition of Daniel. 1949. Reprint ed. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Baker Book House, 1969.

A conservative commentary from the amillennial viewpoint.

MacArther, John, Jr. The Future of Israel (Daniel 9:20–12:13). Chicago: Moody, 1991.

MacRae, Allan A. The Prophecies of Daniel. Singapore: Christian Life Publishers, 1991.

Miller, Stephen R. Daniel. The New American Commentary. Vol. 18. Broadman & Holman Publishers, 1994.

An excellent commentary from an evangelical point of view. The author writes from a premillennial perspective, interacts well with other scholars (both critical and conservative evangelical), and has provided a well-researched commentary with ample footnoting. This (along with Gleason Archer's commentary) may be the best commentary available. Highly recommended!

Montgomery, James A. A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Book of Daniel. The International Critical Commentary. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1927.

Although somewhat dated, this is still the most complete treatment of the textual data of Daniel. Montgomery usually opts for the critical position and is amillennial in viewpoint. Very technical.

Pentecost, J. Dwight. "Daniel." In The Bible Knowledge Commentary, Old Testament, ed. by John F. Walvoord and Roy B. Zuck, 1323-75. Wheaton, IL: Victor Books, Scripture Press Publications, Inc., 1985.

Dr. Pentecost has served on the faculty of Dallas Seminary for over 35 years, and is the author of the classic work on prophecy, Things to Come. The commentary here is brief and nontechnical from a dispensational premillennial viewpoint. Helpful.

Phillips, John. Exploring the Book of Daniel. John Phillips Commentary Series. Kregel Publications, 2003.

Porteous, Norman W. Daniel, a Commentary. 2d rev. ed. Philadelphia: Westminster, 1979.

Contains a useful supplement reviewing publications since the original edition of 1962.

Pusey, E. B. Lectures on Daniel the Prophet. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1864; reprint, New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1885; reprint, Minneapolis, MN: Klock & Klock Christian Publishers, 1978.

This work stems from nine lectures that Pusey delivered at the divinity school of Oxford University as Regius Professor of Hebrew. Over 500 pp., with helpful defense against the critical attack upon the book.

Sevener, Harold A. God's Man in Babylon; The Visions and Prophecies of Daniel. Charlotte, NC: Chosen People Ministries, Inc., 1994.

A readable exposition of Daniel from a premillennial and dispensational viewpoint, written by a former director of Chosen People Ministries.

Slotki, J. J. Daniel-Ezra-Nehemiah. London: Soncino, 1978.

Smith-Christopher, Daniel L. "Daniel." In Introduction to Apocalyptic Literature, Daniel, and the Minor Prophets. New Interpreter's Bible, Vol. VII. Abingdon Press, 1996.

Strauss, Lehman. The Prophecies of Daniel. Neptune, N.J.: Loizeaux Bros., 1969.

Talbot, Louis T. The Prophecies of Daniel. 3d ed. Wheaton, IL: Van Kampen Press, 1954.

Tanner, J. Paul. A Commentary on the Book of Daniel. In the BEE World course on The Book of Daniel. Available online at <www.paultanner.org> and see under the option for "Daniel Studies."

Theodoret (of Cyrus, Syria). Theodoret: Commentary on Daniel. Trans. Robert C. Hill. Atlanta: SBL, 2006.

Theodoret wrote his commentary on Daniel ca. AD 433. He takes the 20th year of Artaxerxes as his terminus ad quo for the calculations. But he puts the 62 weeks before the 7 weeks.

Wallace, Ronald S. The Lord is King: The Message of Daniel. Downers Grove, IL: Inter-Varsity Press, 1979.

Contemporary applications.

Walvoord, John F. Daniel; The Key to Prophetic Revelation. Chicago: Moody Press, 1971.

Dr. Walvoord provides an excellent English based commentary on Daniel from the dispensational, premillennial viewpoint. Dr. Walvoord was president of Dallas Seminary for over 30 years, and is one of the leading evangelical scholars on prophecy in the world as attested by his many popular books and articles on prophetic subjects. Non-technical.

Whitcomb, John C. Daniel. Chicago: Moody Press, 1985.

Wood, Leon. A Commentary on Daniel. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan Pub. House, 1973.

A helpful and readable commentary from a premillennial & pretribulational viewpoint, with a combination of expositional and exegetical comments.

Young, Edward J. The Prophecy of Daniel. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans Pub. Co., 1949.

This is a good representation of a treatment of Daniel from a conservative amillennial viewpoint, though weak in eschatological perspective.

Zöckler, Otto. "Daniel." In vol. 7: Ezekiel, Daniel and the Minor Prophets. Translated, enlarged and edited by James Strong, and aided by G. Miller. Lange's Commentary on the Holy Scriptures. 12 vols. New York: Scribner's, 1870, 1876, 1915; reprint ed., Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan Pub. House, 1960.

Zöckler was a professor in the Univ. of Greifswald, Prussia, and his commentary was originally written in German.

Stefanovic, Zdravko. The Aramaic of Daniel in the Light of Old Aramaic. Journal for the Study of the Old Testament 129. Sheffield: JSOT, 1992.

This is reviewed in JETS (March 1995). This is also reviewed in BibSac 150:599 (Jul-Sep 1993) by Richard A. Taylor. He notes (373-74),

"Stefanovic's thesis is simple: The Aramaic of Daniel shows important affinities with Old Aramaic inscriptions mainly from the ninth, eighth, and seventh centuries B.C. . . .

. . . Stefanovic draws these conclusions: (1) Old Aramaic is not as uniform as has sometimes been claimed, and allowance must be made for dialectical differences within Old Aramaic. (2) Certain objections to an early dating for the Book of Daniel may be answered by paying greater attention to similarities between Old Aramaic and the Aramaic of Daniel. (3) A significant amount of material in the Aramaic of Daniel compares favorably with Old Aramaic texts."

Hoehner, Harold W. Chronological Aspects of the Life of Christ. Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan Publishing House, 1977.

This is a summation of the six-part series of articles by Dr. Hoehner that were printed in Bibliotheca Sacra (vol. 130 [1973] - vol 132 [1975]) with some editing and updating. This is a carefully reasoned study on the chronological aspects related to the life of Christ, in which he concludes with a crucifixion date of AD 33. The final article in the series (Jan-Mar 1975) concentrates on the Seventy Weeks prophecy of Dan 9:24-27. This is a foundational study for a serious interpretation of Dan 9:24-27. Optional interpretations are carefully considered.

The author tries to build a case that most commentators are using a Western concept of time rather than an ancient Near Eastern one. Thus there is a need for a re-orientation of the time concept.

This has long been regarded as the standard edition for the OG of Daniel. The 1st ed. was based on Ms. 88, Syh, and the Chester Beatty fragments of Papyrus 967. Ziegler (in the 1st edition) did not have access to all the fragments of 967. With the 1999 revised edition under Olivier Munnich, however, we now have an up-to-date standard critical edition of OG. One might wish to also consult McLay's article, "A Collation of Variants from 967 to Ziegler's Critical Edition . . ." (see above). McLay argued that there were cases where the reading of 967 should be accepted over Ziegler's 1st ed. text. The newer 2nd ed. has an extensive textual apparatus for the Th text, indicating numerous textual variants for the Th tradition.

Rather than viewing apocalyptic literature as defined by a developed angelology, symbolic visions and a divine determination of history, Greenberg argues that the distinguishing features are the doctrine of a succession of world ages and the visionary's tour of extra-mundane spheres (see 1 Enoch), both of which reflect the apocalyptists' intense desire to know hidden matters.

Higher Criticism: Date, Authorship, Historical Reliability

Anderson, Bernhard W. Understanding the Old Testament. 4th ed. Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice - Hall, 1986.

Anderson is a recognized Old Testament scholar, and there is a wealth of information to be found here. However, he writes from a critical perspective and denies the historicity and traditional authorship of Daniel. He holds that the Book of Daniel was composed by an unknown writer shortly after the outbreak of the Maccabean wars (2nd cent., BC). See pp 618ff. for a non-conservative view of Daniel.

Archer, Gleason, Jr. A Survey of Old Testament Introduction. Rev. ed. Chicago: Moody Press, 1974.

This is one of the best Old Testament introductions available from a conservative evangelical viewpoint. Archer defends the traditional authorship of the book as being from the hand of the sixth century BC Daniel, and refutes the theory of a Maccabean pseudigraph.

Finley, Thomas J. "The Book of Daniel in the Canon of Scripture." Bibliotheca Sacra 165:658 (Apr-Jun 2008): 195-208.

The author brings forth evidence that Daniel was originally placed in the OT canon in the prophets, not the writings. Therefore any argument for the lateness of the book based on its placement in the writings is invalid.

Rowley, H. H. "The Historicity of the Fifth Chapter of Daniel." Journal of Theological Studies 32 (1931): 12-31.

Typical of critical scholars, Rowley attacks the historicity of Daniel 5.

Talmon, S. "Daniel." In The Literary Guide to the Bible, ed. R. Alter and F. Kermode. Cambridge: Harvard, 1987.

Talmon classifies the book as "inverted plagiarism," in which "an author bent on attaining public acclaim of his writings would willingly suppress his own name, ascribing his creations to a worthy figure of old whose name alone would suffice to assure them of general acceptance" (346).

Waltke, Bruce. "The Date of the Book of Daniel." Bibliotheca Sacra 133 (Oct-Dec 1976): 319-29.

An excellent defense of the traditional date for Daniel.

A classic defense of the historicity of Daniel, although the book is somewhat dated at this point. Archaeological discoveries since this book was written (particularly the Qumran scrolls) need to be taken into account. However, there is a goldmine of helpful information refuting the stance of critical scholars in these nearly 700 pp. of text.

"Irenaeus is the source not only for specific points of Hippolytean exegesis but also for the overall eschatological approach. The major patterns of historical-eschatological understanding so important to Hippolytus—the succession of world-empires in chapters 2, 7 and 8 of Daniel, the eschatological interpretation of the Seventy Weeks prophecy, and the creation-week typology—are already present in Irenaeus. There is, therefore, not a great deal of new material in Hippolytus. He does develop a few original themes; but by and large he is not an innovator but a preserver and collector of what has gone before. This suggests that in Hippolytus we find a kind of "main-line" eschatology which may have been quite widespread during the closing decades of the second century" (p 339).

OT Abstracts: "Asserting the distinctiveness of Daniel, B. sums up certain anomalies (e.g., mix of genres, of languages) that make the book difficult to classify. Moving to its relation to historical materials and to certain intertextual elements, he points out its relation to exilic texts (Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Lamentations). The writer, B. concludes, can be seen as musing on the prophetic materials and pondering the challenges of living faithfully in exile, and perhaps as anticipating a radical military-type intervention from God."

Boogaart, Thomas A. "Daniel 6: A Tale of Two Empires." Reformed Review 39:2 (Winter 1986): 106-112.

The article focuses on the elements of "story" within the chapter, such as exposition, challenge, rising action, climax and denouement. He does point out the aspect of apocalyptic theme within the chapter that argues for the unity of the book as a whole.

Gooding, D.W. "The Literary Structure of the Book of Daniel and Its Implications." Tyndale Bulletin 32 (1981) : 43-79.

Gooding proposes that the book consists of ten units, corresponding to the chapter divisions (with the exception of ch 10–12 which serve as the final unit of the book). These ten are then divided into two groups (ch 1–5 and ch 6–12). Within the first group, chapters 2 and 3 form a subgroup, as do chapters 4 and 5. Similarly, within the second group, chapters 7 and 8 form a subgroup, as do chapters 9 and 10–12. Gooding proposes that there are also deliberate correspondences between the subgroups of Group One and the subgroups of Group Two. The analysis is helpful for showing certain parallels and correspondences within the book, but ultimately Gooding's proposal is not convincing. A major division following chapter 7 (in connection with the shift in language from Aramaic to Hebrew), is more probable.

Henze, Matthias. "The Narrative Frame of Daniel: A Literary Assessment." Journal for the Study of Judaism in the Persian, Hellenistic and Roman Periods 32 (2001): 5-24.

OT Abstracts: "H. challenges common assumptions about the origin and function of the court tales in Daniel 1-6. The world in the tales is a fictitious construct that is not identical with the socio-historical world of their authors. The messages of the tales must be inferred by comparison with texts of the same genre (Esther, the Joseph story, and Ahiqar) and by reading the tales within the larger context of the entire book. Literary conventions, often dictated by common genre elements, shape the tales. The tales' sparse description of human characters emphasizes the message, i.e., God's glorification, not that of the messenger. The conflict of authority is predominantly theological. Nebuchadnezzar's two doxologies (3:31-33 and 6:27-28) frame the tales and summarize their theological message. Doxologies set the stage for the apocalyptic scenario in the second half of the book."

The present study will show that based upon its literary genre the extreme position that views all of Daniel (including chaps. 1–6) as being written in the second century BC is manifestly in error. Further, it will demonstrate that arguments for a pre-Maccabean provenance for the first six chapters need not exclude the traditional dating in the late Babylonian or early Persian periods.

Stanislav calls attention to the poetic features of three passages (Dan 8:23-26; 9:24-27; and 12:1-3), and argues that the poetic structuring highlights these sections as the most relevant messages of the visions in which they occur.

- OT Abstracts: "S. offers a reassessment of the political and nationalistic agenda of Daniel in relation to post-Enlightenment biblical theology, affirming the particular over against the universal, which generates a unified reading of Daniel 1-6 and 7-12. S. demonstrates that (1) the political and religious aims of the Hasmonean revolt permeate the entire book, not just the visions; (2) the use of mythological and symbolic language reflects perspectives of the priesthood and Jerusalem Temple correlating events of heaven and earth; (3) in contrast to the prophetic books which identify Israel's punishment as YHWH's will (i.e., Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel), Daniel associates YHWH with the overthrow of foreign powers. Even though it is an apocalyptic book, Daniel is concerned with events of this world which it attempts to change for the better."

Henze, Matthias. The Madness of King Nebuchadnezzar: The Ancient Near Eastern Origins and Early History of Interpretation of Daniel 4. Journal for the Study of Judaism Suppl. 61. Leiden: Brill, 1999.

OT Abstracts: "H. first examines the many ancient variants of the trope of animalization of which the story of Nebuchadnezzar's madness in Daniel 4 is a potent example. He then turns to the interpretation of Daniel 4 in rabbinic Judaism; according to the rabbis, Nebuchadnezzar was never granted the grace of redemption, contrary to the plain reading of Dan 4:31-34. Rather he 'becomes an abhorrent type, not simply of pride and arrogance, but of the wickedness of contemporary Rome' (p. 207). In contrast, Christian exegetes, East and West, emphasized the penitential aspect of Nebuchadnezzar's metamorphosis. Tertullian, e.g., in the West and Ephrem in the East view Nebuchadnezzar as an exemplary penitent. A number of Syriac texts from the fourth century onward draw on the model of Nebuchadnezzar for a newly evolving ascetic discipline. There are three appendixes: (1) Daniel at Qumran; (2) a translation of Daniel 4 from the MT and the Old Greek; and (3) a translation of a homily on Daniel 4 by Jacob of Serug (451-521)."

OT Abstracts: "Since the end of the nineteenth century at least sixteen primary influences on the vision of Dan 7:2-14 have been proposed, this demonstrating the complexity of the passage's traditio-historical background. However, most traditio-historical proposals concerning the vision of Daniel 7 barely outline the parameters of the debate and usually concentrate either on its first (vv. 2-8) or second part (vv. 9-14). E.'s history of research discusses the various proposed influences on the whole vision in detail and with a critical evaluation. The study also highlights the mechanics of the traditio-historical method, and the problems in determining what constitutes a 'parallel.'"

The author explores the use of creation imagery in Dan 7, by evoking Genesis 1. Chaos may come to the world, but God is able to restore order and bring the world back to its original order. Yet, Dan 7 adds a new element, namely, that of an eternal kingdom. This will ensure that the reversion is permanent.

OT Abstracts: "A. cites two previously overlooked Mesopotamian parallels to Dan 9:24-25, which changes the years of punishment for Jerusalem from the seventy to seven times seventy announced by Jeremiah. He argues that these parallels contain three features also found in vv. 24-25: (1) an unnamed future prince; (2) the restoration of a dilapidated temple associated with that prince; and (3) the anointing of the temple. He cites Ezek 45:3; Exod 30:25-29 (cf. 1 Chr 23:13), and Exod 40:9 as proof for the practice of anointing temples in Israel. He concludes that the tradition of anointing previously dilapidated temples provides the background for understanding Dan 9:24-25."

Argues that the distinction between the seven "sevens" and the sixty-nine "sevens" is the product of the Masoretic punctuation. Important sources like the LXX, Theodotion, Symmachus, and the rabbinically educated Aquila all treat the first sixty-nine "sevens" as a single period.

Chisholm has a section on the Book of Daniel, and his interpretation of the seventy weeks prophecy is noteworthy. Though a professor at Dallas Seminary, he does not take the numbers literally, does not take the messianic view, and concludes that the prediction relates to a time in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes (2nd cent. BC). Yet he views this as a type of the end-time Antichrist. Chisholm is also influenced by McComiskey's article (that it is 7 "weeks" until the anointed one, not 7 + 62).

An excellent article, especially on refinements of chronological detail. Hoehner understands each week = 7 years, and holds that the decree in view is that of Nehemiah 2 in 444 BC. He then shows mathematically how the first 69 weeks conclude with Jesus' entry into Jerusalem in AD 33.

Argues against the dispensational interpretation of a "gap" before the 70th week in favor of a fulfillment in the Roman period for all 70 weeks. Hence, Christ dies in the middle of the 70th week. He does not deal with the problem this view raises concerning the 2nd half of the 70th week.

Lurie, David H. "A New Interpretation of Daniel's 'Sevens' and the Chronology of the Seventy 'Sevens.'" Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 33:3 (Sept 1990): 303-309.

Lurie attempts to argue that the Cyrus decree in 538 BC is the proper terminus a quo for the calculations. Furthermore, the three groups of sevens are not composed of the same number of sevens but various multiples of the integer seven, i.e., the sevens in the first group of 7 sevens are actually 14 years, hence 7 x 14. The 62 sevens on the other hand, are actually seven years each, hence 62 x 7. Finally, the 70th seven is made up of 70 years. Using these figures the first 69 sevens take you from 538 BC to 6 BC, the latter being the birth of Christ. The final week is from 6 BC until AD 65, but Christ dies in the middle, i.e., in AD 30. All in all, his suggestions are too arbitrary to be convincing, but it does show the futility of trying to make the numbers work when using the 538 date (which is why Young who uses the same date has to take the numbers symbolically).

Rejects a Messianic interpretation altogether. Takes the "decree" as Jeremiah's prophecy in Jer 29:10 (which he dates about 594 BC). It is not 69 weeks until Messiah, but 7 weeks until Cyrus followed by another 62 weeks in which the city is being rebuilt (a conclusion based on the punctuation of the Masoretic text in 9:25). The "Anointed one" who is cut off in 9:26 is not Jesus but the Antichrist. Since the dates will obviously not support his scheme, he tries (unsuccessfully!) to argue for a symbolic understanding of 7 and 70 weeks. Not convincing! Yet has influenced people like Robert Chisholm.

He argues further that the phrase 'Anointed Ones' (9:25-26) signifies persons of that same community, who were themselves anointed. The first group of Anointed Ones encountered difficulty at the end of the seven years (not a precise figure), while the second group did so during the last periods of sevens. So understood, the passage was open to further interpretation, as occurs in Mark 13."

This study understands Dan 9:24-27 as a sixth century BC prophecy, but focusing on the postponement of the expected restoration caused by the poor spiritual condition of the remnant at the close of the exile. In the brief announcement by Gabriel, the captivity of Jerusalem is extended from the seventy years originally intended (Jer 25:1-13; 29:1-14), to seventy weeks of years, that is, 490 years. This results in a prophetic era beginning with the reign of Nebuchadnezzar and continuing through the era when the Medes, Persians, and Greeks respectively exercised varying degrees of control over the ancient Near East.

The author assumes a 2nd century author and fulfilment in the Maccabean era. Argues that the author of Daniel thought in terms of a periodization of history based on Sabbaths and Jubilees.

OT Abstracts: "R. reads Daniel 9 as a unity, in accord with the emerging consensus that the author incorporated a previously existing prayer (vv. 4-19) into his narrative (vv. 1-3, 21-27). He concludes that vv. 1-2 constitute a reflection on the religio-historical situation in which the scribal community responsible for the book found itself ca. 165 B.C.E. Then vv. 3-20 (including the borrowed prayer) explain why the full restitution of Jerusalem promised in Jeremiah 25 and 29 has not yet materialized: because the community needs to turn fervently to God and confess its sinfulness. Next, vv. 21-27 offer a timetable for that reconstruction—not a table of specific dates, but a periodization of history based on Sabbaths and Jubilees."

Dan 1:15; b. Shab. 149). By its play on the ambiguities of the word 'desire,' the Book of Daniel makes a satiric jab at Babylon (representing Hellenism) on the subject of sexuality. The angel (and Michael) were fighting demonic spirits, which Stevens terms "empire spirits" (not territorial). He concludes with sound advice related to the issue of a theology for spiritual warfare. He notes that Daniel did not engage in prayer for the purpose of "binding" or "evicting" them.

But Antiochus does not fit the verses' description of an individual who will not show favor to any gods and who will honor a god of fortresses not worshiped by his ancestors, especially given his cultic gifts to Greek cities. The evidence thus favors interpreting Dan 11:36-45 as a prophecy to be fulfilled by a future king."

Steinmann, Andrew E. "Is the Antichrist in Daniel 11?" BibSac 162:646 (Apr-Jun 2005): 195-209.

Helpful in defending the notion that there is a break at Dan 11:36, and that the discussion shifts from its focus on Antiochus IV to the end-time Antichrist.

Tanner, J. Paul. "Daniel's 'King of the North': Do We Owe Russia An Apology?" Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 35:3 (Sept 1992): 315-28.

This article dispels the notion that the "King of the North" in Daniel 11:36ff. is a reference to Russia, and suggests that the proper interpretation is with a coalition of northern "Arab" countries that once composed the Seleucid Empire.

Tanner, J. Paul. "Rethinking Ezekiel's Invasion by Gog." Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society 39:1 (Mar 1996): 29-46.

Although this article deals primarily with Ezek 38–39, it is helpful for understanding the reference to "north" in the prophets. Relevant for a study of Dan 11:36ff.

Bailey, Daniel P. "The Intertextual Relationship of Daniel 12:2 and Isaiah 26:19: Evidence from Qumran and the Greek Versions." Tyndale Bulletin 51 (2000): 305-8.

OT Abstracts: "B. notes that the text of Isa 26:19 utilized in Dan 12:2 finds a closer verbal parallel in 1Qisa^a than in MT Isaiah. B. examines the relationship between the Hebrew and Greek texts and the various translations of the Hebrew verbs in the LXX and the minor ancient versions of the Daniel and Isaiah verses. He finds support for M. Hengel's thesis about the popularity of a Qumran text-type underlying the Book of Daniel."

Redditt, Paul L. "Calculating the 'Times': Daniel 12:5-13." Perspectives in Religious Studies 25 (1998): 373-79.

OT Abstracts: "In this study, R. examines what the Book of Daniel has to say about the future from the perspective of the second century community responsible for its final form. R.'s conclusions are as follows: (1) Dan 12:5-13 constitutes an epilogue to 10:1–12:4 and to the whole Book of Daniel as well; and, within this epilogue, v. 13 originally belonged with and concluded the vision in 10:1–12:4. (2) Verses 11-12 are not additions to 12:5-10, but the culminating point to which they build. (3) Those verses calculate more precisely the date for the impending 'end,' and do so in two stages: one stage is to occur 1290 days after the 'abomination that makes desolate,' the other 45 days later. Verse 11 probably looks ahead to the fall of the world empires, while v. 12 anticipates the inauguration of God's kingdom, with the righteous dead being resurrected to life in the faithful community."
